The three operations of crushing, leveling

TEST YOUR BAKING POWDER TO-DAY!

Does Indecency Pay?

A notice has gained ground that it is commonly profitable for a newspaper to cater to low tastes, and that it invariably increases its circulation by gathering and publishing all the details of revolting social scandal. It seems to be the opinion of the New York press which has exposed the city press in this reprehensible practice. If, however, such good testimony as the New York press gives is to be believed, it turns out that the ways of uncleanliness in journalism are unprofitable, and that the scrupulously decent newspaper is, in the long run, the most profitable, a most desirable change may be looked for all along the line. It can not have escaped the observation of newspaper conductors that there has been for some years a general complaint among men who have families that it is difficult to find a paper with the news in it, which is decent enough to be admitted into the house. The public has been told that the public demanded the depraved sort of news and was willing to pay for it, and would always by preference buy the journals that furnished it. We are glad to be authoritatively informed that this is a commercial mistake. Our theory of the newspaper is that it is very much what the public want it, and make it, and we believe that as a rule the tone of a newspaper is higher than that of a majority of its readers.—Hartford Courant.
